

Remembering Pat: Pat's Communication Style

Michelle Marciniak

You had to be receptive to her style of communication. Sometimes it was aggressive and came across very strong and forceful. But that's what made Pat so successful. She was a very direct communicator. She communicated in a black and white style, meaning there was very little gray area, so you knew exactly where she stood at all times.

You know, as a student athlete, you had to figure out what you wanted to do with that. And if you didn't know, she would also help you through that as well. There's no ambiguity. She's very direct. You know, where you stand and you don't walk out of the gym or in a meeting or film session and think, "Wow. I have no idea how I did or how I performed."
