

Make Winning an Attitude: Introduction, Featuring Sue Nokes

Sue Nokes, Advisory Board Vice Chairman, Asurion; Former Chief Customer & Operations Officer, T-Mobile

You don't win on talent alone. You need to know how to handle adversity. You need the right attitude. It doesn't matter how gifted you are. At some point, you'll get knocked down. What do you do then? How do you turn trials into triumph? How do you make winning an attitude?

Pat was no stranger to hardship. Her 1997 team lost 10 games on the way to their fifth national title. That sort of success doesn't happen by accident. Pat daily encouraged her players to practice a positive outlook that steered every circumstance, good or bad, towards winning. She was able to get the most out of her teams because she knew how to apply pressure at just the right times in order to keep her players accountable to their vision.

Pat's mental game came from focus and hard work. She habitually focused on helping her team have a winning attitude. How did she do it? Pat said ...

Pat believed attitude determines performance. When you prepare for victory, you visualize it. You train for it. You practice it in every area of your life. You make winning an attitude. With the right attitude, nothing can stop you from working setbacks into successes.

In this inspirational session, you'll hear from Timothy Alexander, who was a top-ranked high school football player headed for a division one career until a car accident paralyzed from the neck down. This didn't stop Timothy from becoming the first paraplegic in D1 history to get a full-ride football scholarship with the University of Alabama, Birmingham. He later went on to graduate with a master's degree and now he directs UAB's Football Character Excellence Program, provides life coaching, and travels the country sharing his powerful story.

As Timothy digs into the fundamentals of Pat's Definite Dozen principle "making winning an attitude," you will see how Pat cultivated a championship mindset in her players. In addition, you will learn foundational techniques for embodying a positive outlook that always wins, no matter the challenge.

As Pat said, “You can’t determine the weather, luck, or other people’s opinion; but when things don’t go as planned, there is one thing you can count on: your own outlook.” That’s when attitude demonstrates the difference between winning and losing.
