

Make Winning an Attitude: Wrap-Up, Featuring Sue Nokes

Coach Pat Summitt

I've said that success in my business is about putting the right people in the right place at the right time. But all too often, it doesn't work out that way. Times like that, you'd better have a winning attitude. Many times, you have to hand off an important job to someone who isn't necessarily your first choice. Maybe the person you wanted to take the shot is on the bench in foul trouble or is denied the ball. In any business, you're going to have people in roles where they're not always 100 percent comfortable.

Pat said, "It is extremely important to make sure that your leaders have that crucial blend of emotion and logic because their attitude will infuse your entire organization." You have the ability to create a winning culture by the very power of your own positive outlook. As others follow your example, they will be emboldened to meet hardship with preparation and focus.

In this module, we learned that winning starts in the mind by combining practice and belief, even in adversity. The extraordinary is always within your reach when you believe in yourself enough to position every loss as a beginning of your comeback story. You must see every setback as an opportunity to learn and let your attitude drive what you do. A winning mindset says, "Yes, I can" and claims victory day by day.

Second, a winning attitude embodies positivity when it responds to pressure with action. The best way to handle negativity is continually do your doubts and hold yourself and others accountable to shared goals. When you do this, you sustain growth through the grind.

Finally, we learned the importance of visualizing your victory. When you are present to your vision, you are 100 percent truthful with yourself and never cut corners in your preparation. You follow through. A positive outlook anticipates the outcome and trains every habit, routine, and thought to go beyond the finish line towards continued success.

Pat said, "With the right attitude and mindset, huge obstacles are suddenly surmountable. When you make winning your attitude, you are unstoppable."
