

Change Is a Must: Introduction, Featuring Karen Hilton

Coach Pat Summitt

"If I don't seek change constantly in my profession, I get left behind. Familiarity is not a good thing on the basketball court. It's a game of constant shifts and adjustments, but it applies to any field. If you aren't flexible, if you don't change your mindset to meet the circumstances and your personnel, you will lose. If you grant yourself the freedom to change, it will open worlds to you. Don't like your job? Change it. Don't like your attitude? Change it. You can change the way you think. You can change your game plan and you can change your life. Don't just sit there in your comfortable chair. Do something."

Karen Hilton, Founder & President, Executive Coaching

Hi, I'm Karen Hilton. This module introduces one of my favorite Definite Dozen principles: change is a must. Peyton Manning, one of the NFL's greatest players, and the league's only five-time MVP award winner, was Pat Summitt's friend and probably one of her biggest fans. Peyton's favorite Pat Summitt quote is, "When you choose to be a competitor, you choose to be a survivor. When you choose to compete, you must make the conscious decision to find out what your real limits are, not just what you think they are."

Leadership and change management experts from all over the world agree with Pat. Just like Pat, the experts have discovered that before we can inspire others to change, we need to change. We need to find out what our real limits are, not just what we think they are. We need to understand that it's the inner change that makes the outer change possible.

And I think you're in for a big treat because we've asked Professor Steve Olson, an award-winning teacher and a leadership expert, to help us better understand why change starts from within. Steve is a distinguished lecturer at the University of Tennessee, Chattanooga. He's been a pioneering leader in executive development for more than 25 years. He's coached more than 2,000 executives as they have strived to reach their full potential as leaders, innovators, and change makers.

Professor Olson, through his engaging stories and unique teaching style, will show us how Pat came to embrace change, inspire change, and lead change; and then do it all over again and again, year after year. Are you ready to change? Let's get started.
